Norwegian Offshore Oil & Gas Engineer/Author Reza Sarmast (alias Alexander Pushkar) launches his highly praised book in London for the benefit of British readers. This is a one day event which occurs at Kensington Central Library on Thursday April 25th, see details below:

Reza Sarmast is an experienced Offshore Oil & Gas engineer with 29 years of hands-on experience in Oil industry internationally and in Norway. He had executed projects worldwide ; US, Europe, Far East, and the Middle East (including representing Statoil in South Pars Phases 6-8 in Iran). He has a Ph.D. degree from Imperial College (London University), has studied French in Paris, and also corporate finance in Norway.

The aim of the book is to demonstrate that "it is possible to do high quality projects with a smile!" He builds upon the occasions when he had to step in and make short talks at various circumstances; in Oslo, London, Paris, and other places.

As an introduction to the book launch-he states:

"My talks were always based upon what was-interesting and funny- during execution of that particular project. To my utter surprise, these little stories became popular among various project members, so much that most of those who were part of the principal engineering Company (where I was employed) requested to hear me talking on such social occasions"

Guests range from technical experts, university lecturers, literary personalities to; engineers, office workers, and the like.

One of the topics touched upon in the book is a comparison made between Norwegian and British approaches to Offshore Oil & Gas engineering and design. He candidly submits his assessment for readers' judgement.

Book's title: "Who says it is not fun to be an Offshore engineer in Norway?" - ISBN: 978-82-303-2023-5
